

Long Distance Loosing, Turin Brakes in 2006

The year 2006 was quiet in some respects. There weren't a lot of releases. In fact the only release that saw the (digital) light of day was the Live Session, recorded in 2005 and released world wide on Itunes over 6 months later. But a nice session it was. The news value of it, however, wasn't that high... There were no new songs. Thankfully, new songs were to be heard elsewhere...

Early 2006 it was promised there would be the occasional live gig, and they actually took place... London got a nice charity gig to collect money for cancer research and after that almost every 23rd of the month a gig took place... Well every 2 months... Well it wasn't that regular... But still there were gigs. And most importantly there were new songs. Fans heard new tracks like Ghost and Other Side of the World to name two of the new titles. This all ended in a short November tour, which eventually consisted of almost 10 gigs, so it wasn't that short, which visited all kinds of places the boys hadn't been for quite some time. Playing intimate venues, all dates were sold out in no-time, and fans could hear even more new songs and already pick their favourites. Quite nice when the album has yet to be recorded.

The year 2007 looks like a totally different year. January will see the boys in studio with Ethan Johns, which may give us an album before the end of the year! And an album means gigs, and a gig means social life... And a social life means nicer people. And nicer people may eventually lead to world peace.

Keep that in mind... Roll on 2007. It's going to be good...
